Prices on all materials are kept up to date and checks and home made currency are used as the medium of exchange.

Indict 214 For Herrin Mine Massacre; Blame Officers

(By Associated Press)

Marian, Ill., Sept. 23—In a comprehensive report the special grand jury which investigated the Herrin mine killings, arraigned Adjutant General Black for failure to send troops, Sheriff Melvin Phaxton and local officers for alleged failure to protect life and property and returned a total of 214 indictments.

The jury returned four more indictments for murder, bringing the total to 42; 58 for conspiracy to commit murder; 54 for assault to murder and previously had returned 58 for conspiracy and rioting.

Discussing the Southern Illinois Coal Company's action in reopening the Strip mine while the strike was in progress, the report said W. J. Lester, owner, "either was willfully ignorant of the danger or blindly determined to risk life and property if profit could be made."

The report emphatically stated that there was no law to forbid Adjutant General Black to call out troops unless a request was made by the sheriff. This, as pointed, was the explanation made by Adjutant General Black, for his failure to send troops to the scene.

Sheriff Phaxton is a member of the miners union and also a candidate for county treasurer, and his alleged failure to take adequate measures to preserve peace, was either because of sympathy for the union or through fear that it would hurt his candidacy the report declared.

Calkins has announced that he will seek conviction for the pair on a second degree murder count, and a long trial is anticipated.

(By Associated Press)

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 23—Judge J. H. Wilkerson today granted Attorney General Daugherty's petition for a nation wide temporary injunction against the striking shop men.

The court gave attorney for the defense until Monday morning at ten o'clock to study the decision and prepare to argue the text of the injunction under the order which will be signed.

Attorney General Daugherty on Thursday presented the government's proposed draft which is even more drastic than the restraining order now in force.

Total benefits paid during the year including one item of $900 death benefit and one item of indebtedness, amounted to $8,389.

(By Associated Press)

Marian, Ill., Sept. 23—In a comprehensive report the special grand jury which investigated the Herrin mine killings, arraigned Adjutant General Black for failure to send troops, Sheriff Melvin Phaxton and local officers for alleged failure to protect life and property and returned a total of 214 indictments.

The jury returned four more indictments for murder, bringing the total to 42; 58 for conspiracy to commit murder; 54 for assault to murder and previously had returned 58 for conspiracy and rioting.

Discussing the Southern Illinois Coal Company's action in reopening the Strip mine while the strike was in progress, the report said W. J. Lester, owner, "either was willfully ignorant of the danger or blindly determined to risk life and property if profit could be made."

The report emphatically stated that there was no law to forbid Adjutant General Black to call out troops unless a request was made by the sheriff. This, as pointed, was the explanation made by Adjutant General Black, for his failure to send troops to the scene.

Sheriff Phaxton is a member of the miners union and also a candidate for county treasurer, and his alleged failure to take adequate measures to preserve peace, was either because of sympathy for the union or through fear that it would hurt his candidacy the report declared.

Expect Record Issue Of Hunting Licenses This Year

With the present rate of applications, Wood County will in all probability exceed its previous record for the number of hunting licenses issued to residents of this county. To date, County Clerk Sam Church has issued 2300 licenses and there remains a steady stream of applicants. The highest number ever issued was 3350, several years ago. At the present rate, it is expected that 3500 licenses will be issued.

Auxiliary To Hear Report On Annual State Convention

A report of the recent state convention at Beloit will be read at the first fall meeting of the local American Legion Auxiliary by the president, Miss Irma Johnson, who represented the Wisconsin Rapids post. The meeting will be held at the K. C. hall Monday evening, September 25, at 8 p. m.

Heavy Criminal Calendar At Fall Term Of Court

The heaviest calendar of criminal cases in recent years awaits Judge B. Park when he opens the regular fall term of the circuit court at the Wood county court house October 2. Twenty-seven cases are on the criminal docket, including ten alleged violations of the prohibition laws, and four statutory offenses.

Interest in the court term will be centered upon the trial of Mrs. Lucille Daugherty, and her mother, Mrs. Dora Eichhorn, for the murder of Adolph Virum last August. District Attorney Frank W. Calkins has announced that he will seek conviction for the pair on a second degree murder count, and a long trial is anticipated.

Another case which has attracted considerable attention is that of Mrs. Ella Engman, charged with the abandonment of her new born child. Mrs. Engman's baby was found near death from exposure in the woods near her home at Kellner last spring, and died soon after. Mrs. Engman, whose husband, Robert Engman, had recently left her, is said to have admitted having left the child in the woods at birth. Her husband also faces trial for wife-abandonment at this term of court.

Among the Wisconsin Rapids people charged with violation of the prohibition laws who will stand trial are Roy Pike and Henry Wadel.

The Wisconsin Rapids football team was leading Tomah at the end of the first half in the game at the high school field this afternoon, 13 to 0. The first touchdown came early in the second quarter when Laramie put the ball over after a spectacular 30 yard run by Nobles. Nason put a drop kick between the bars fo rthe extra point. SHOP MEN HELD RESPONSIBLE FOR STRIKE VIOLENCE

NEW ORDER OBTAINED BY DAUGHERTY SAID TO BE EVEN MORE DRASTIC THAN FIRST; ARGUE DECISION MONDAY

(By Associated Press)

Chicago, Ill., Sept. 23—Judge J. H. Wilkerson today granted Attorney General Daugherty's petition for a nation wide temporary injunction against the striking shop men.

Judge Wilkerson in a lengthy review of the case said the defendants could not deny knowledge and responsibility for the wide spread violence which has marked the strike.

The partial settlement of the strike, he held, has not affected the right of the government to obtain a nation wide injunction.

Argue Decision Monday

The court gave attorney for the defense until Monday morning at ten o'clock to study the decision and prepare to argue the text of the injunction under the order which will be signed.

Attorney General Daugherty on Thursday presented the government's proposed draft which is even more drastic than the restraining order now in force.

The order will affect about 270 officers and 400,000 members of the six crafts belonging to the railroad employes department of the American Federation of Labor.

E. B. A. Shows Growth During Past Year, Report Indicates

The financial condition of the E. B. A., mutual benefit association of the Consolidated employees, was reported in excellent shape by Supt. F. A. Drumb, in his survey of the business of the association to the board of trustees. An increase of $2500 income was shown for the year closed and a total of 675 members are enrolled. Total benefits paid during the year including one item of $900 death benefit and one item of indebtedness, amounted to $8,389.

While the association has lost in the total membership on account of the closing of the large bulk of construction work which had been the reason for an enlarged membership, the average of membership in the association regarded proportionately with the number of men and women employed by the company showed a gain. Only one permanent employee of the association had withdrawn from membership and many new ones have joined it was announced.

IF WE WERE FROM MISSOURI

The people who live in the state of Missouri have a most excellent motto, "Show Me." They mean, of course, that they will not follow every one who says he is a prophet nor believe eve-yone who proclaims himself as the beare ofr a recipe for reforming the world. They propose to use their minds and exercise their common sense on every proposition shown to them. A most excellent precaution, a most worthy motto.

Suppose that all the pweople of this country were to take thought before they believed al lof the accusations brought against our public servants; suppose they said "Show me" when these stories which are an affront to common sense and common decency were repeated in their presence. Wouldn't there be less hate, less envy, less jealousy and better service?

Suppose the same motto were applied when the smooth-tongued promoter comes to our people and proposes to take their savings in exchange for some highly speculative stock in a company to be managed by no one knows whom. Suppose the prospective investor went to any bank in this city and asked advice of his banker before investing. Wouldn't thousands of dollars be saved and hundreds of people be benefitted? Why believe the stranger and doubt the men who live here, invest here, and who are anxious to serve their fellow citizens? Apply the Missouri maxim to patent medicine claims, get-rich-quick lures, political cure-all, and all sorts of false doctrines.

MOTORISTS KU KLUX WANTED?

Wisconsin Rapids has a large number of automobiles. The drivers and owners usually intend to play the game fairly. Still the few who regard no one but themselves are a real menace. They drive with cut-outs open. Tegh drive along the city streets at double the legal rate. They make no effort to signal at turns and at night no effort will induce them to dim their lights or to equip heir headlights with an anti-glare lens. In days gone by, vigilance committees attended to the horse thief and other lawbreakers. Perhaps the drivers who respect the rights of others may have to form a similar organization to preserve a reasonable degree of liberty. Regulatory legislation never comes because fanatics desire it, but because of abuses of privileges and rights. Every wild driver is an excuse for communities like Schofied to make driving as difficult as possible.

Motor Trucks Extend Food Supply Radius 50 Miles

HERBERT HOOVER says: "The motor truck has given every town an extended radius of food supply by some 50 miles, and thereby protects such vital matters as milk and perishables."

Formerly 10 miles was as far as the farmer could profitably haul his produce. The increasing number of motor trucks on the farm is making the farmer more and more independent of other forms of transportation. It is extending a primary market five times, giving the farmer greater security and doing much to insure him the full profit from his crops and produce.

E. E. La Schum, Superintendent of Equipment of the American Railway Express Company, says that while the average mileage of trucks is about 40 miles per day, they are capable of making 100 miles without undue strain.

This means that in every truck there are 60 unused daily transportation miles, which can be used when emergency calls.

The farmers of the 10 states served by the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) own 46,582 trucks. These represent unused, potential transportation of 2,794,920 miles per day—quite enough to make the farmer feel reasonably independent and to make the city dweller secure.

The value of these trucks to their owners, and to the community, depends upon an ample supply of gasoline and oils, instantly available when needed.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana), recognizing its duty to the public, has organized its distributing facilities to a point where only a complete breakdown of public utilities can prevent its supplying these trucks with oil and gasoline needed, no matter in what corner of the 10 states they may be.

In the cycle of service to which the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is committed, the truck plays just as important a part as the automobile and the tractor.

This entire organization is working as one man, to perfect a complete service, and to maintain this service at such a maximum of efficiency that no piece of automotive machinery in the Middle West need ever be delayed a single moment of usefulness through lack of suitable petroleum products.

Motor Trucks Extend Food Supply Radius 50 Miles

HERBERT HOOVER says: "The motor truck has given every town an extended radius of food supply by some 50 miles, and thereby protects such vital matters as milk and perishables."

Formerly 10 miles was as far as the farmer could profitably haul his produce. The increasing number of motor trucks on the farm is making the farmer more and more independent of other forms of transportation. It is extending a primary market five times, giving the farmer greater security and doing much to insure him the full profit from his crops and produce.

E. E. La Schum, Superintendent of Equipment of the American Railway Express Company, says that while the average mileage of trucks is about 40 miles per day, they are capable of making 100 miles without undue strain.

This means that in every truck there are 60 unused daily transportation miles, which can be used when emergency calls.

The farmers of the 10 states served by the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) own 46,582 trucks. These represent unused, potential transportation of 2,794,920 miles per day—quite enough to make the farmer feel reasonably independent and to make the city dweller secure.

The value of these trucks to their owners, and to the community, depends upon an ample supply of gasoline and oils, instantly available when needed.

The Standard Oil Company (Indiana), recognizing its duty to the public, has organized its distributing facilities to a point where only a complete breakdown of public utilities can prevent its supplying these trucks with oil and gasoline needed, no matter in what corner of the 10 states they may be.

In the cycle of service to which the Standard Oil Company (Indiana) is committed, the truck plays just as important a part as the automobile and the tractor.

This entire organization is working as one man, to perfect a complete service, and to maintain this service at such a maximum of efficiency that no piece of automotive machinery in the Middle West need ever be delayed a single moment of usefulness through lack of suitable petroleum products.

BEGIN HERE TODAY

In appreciation of his daring in rescuing her and her companions from highwaymen,

MME. DE SEVENIE had invited the man who preferred to be known as ANDRE DUCHEMIN to dine in her chateau.

Duchemin accepts, despite his resire to avoid all social activities during his leave of absence from the English Secret Service. He was anxious to meet again.

EVE DE MONTALAIS, the American who had been one of those saved by Duchemin from the highwaymen's attack.

En route to the chateau, Duchemin pondered over the arrival in town of a strange motoring party of four men and a woman. He was able to learn only two names:

PHINUIT, apparently a secretary and the chauffeur.

JULES.

GO ON WITH THE STORY

CHAPTER VI

Scenting the Lone Wolf

Dinner was served in a vast and sombre hall whose darkly paneled walls and high-beamed ceiling bred a multitude of shadows that danced about the table, restlessly advancing and retreating as the candles flickered, failed and flared in the gusty draughts.

Rain in sheets sluiced the windows without rest. Round turrets and gables the wind raved and moaned like a famished wild thing denied its kill.

After dinner Duchemin sat talking with Madame de Montalais over their cigarettes. To smoking, curiously enough, Madame de Sevenie offered no objection.

Monsieur knew New York.

"It is my home," said Eve de Montalais softly, looking away.

Her father had been a partner in a great jewelry house, Cottier's, of Paris, London and New York. (So that explained it! She was wearing the blue diamond again tonight, with other jewels worth, in the judgment of a keen connoisseur, a king's ransome.)

Across the drawing room Madame de Sevenie sharply interrogated a manservant had silently presented himself to her attention.

"What is it you want, Jean?"

The servant mumbled his justification: An automobile had broken down on the highroad near the chateau, the chauffeur was unable to move the car or make any repairs in the storm, a gentleman had come to the door to ask. . .

He moved aside, indicating the doorway to the entrance hall, beyond which Mr. Phinuit was to be seen standing with cap in hand, tiny rivulets running from the folds of his motor-coat and forming pools on the polished flooring.

Mr. Phinuit was desolated to think he might be imposing on madame's good nature, but the night was truly inclement, madame la comtesse was already suffering from the cold, and if one might beg for shelter for her and the gentlemen of the party while one telephoned or sent to Nant for another automobile. . . .

But mansieur might feel very sure Madame de Sevenie would never forgive herself if the hospitality of the Chateau de Montalais failed at such a time. She would send servants to the car at once with lights, wraps, umbrellas . . .

There was no necessity for that. The remainder of the party had, it seemed, presumed upon her courtesy in anticipation and was not far from the heels of its ambassador. Even while madame was speaking, Jean was opening the great front doors to those who proved—formal introductions being duly effect by Mr. Phinuit—to be Madame la Comtesse de Lorgnes, monsieur le comte, her husband (this was the well-fed body in tweeds) and Mr. Whitaker Monk, of New York.

These personages were really not at all in a bad way. When Eve de Montalias had carried madame la comtesse off to her own apartment to change her shoes and stockings, the gentlemen trooped to the drawing-room fire, and grew quite cheerful under the conbined influences of warmth and wine and biscuits.

Mr. Whitaker Monk might have been any age between thirty-five and fifty-five, so non-committal was that lantern jawed countenance of a droll with its heavy black, eloquent eyebrows, its rather small blue illegible eyes, its high-bridged nose and prominent nostrils, its wide and thin-lipped mouth, its rather startling pallor.

A chance meeting at Monte Carlo, he said, with his old friends, the Comte et Comtesse de Lorgnes, had resulted in their yielding to his insistence that they tour with him back to Paris by this roundabout way.

"A whim of my age, madame. As a young man I explored this country on a walking tour, inspired by Stevenson. You know, perhaps, his diverting 'Travels with a Donkey'?"

"How strange, then is coincidence," Madame de Sevenie suggested. "You who made a walking tour of this country so long ago, monsieur, regard there that good Monsieur Duchemin, himself engaged upon just such an undertaking."

"But is there anything more wonderful than the workings of the good God?" madame pursued. "Observe that had it not been for Monsieur Duchemin, we should all, I, my daughter, my granddaughter, even poor Georges d'Aubrac, be lying dead at Montpellier-le-Vieux."

Naturally the strangers required to know about that and Madame de Sevenie would talk, in fact doted on telling the tale of that great adventure. Duchemin made a face of resignation, and heard himself extolled as a paladin for strength, address and valor.

Now the enigmatic eyes of Monk were boring into him, seeking to search his soul, with a question in their state which he could not read and, quite likely, would have declined to answer if he could. Also the eyes of Monsieur le Comte de Lorgnes were very round and constant to him. And before Madame de Sevenie was finished, Phinuit strolled in and heard enough to make him subject Duchemin to a not friendly, steady and open inspection.

"But Monsieur Monk!" madame la comtesse exclaimed with vivacity: "do you know what I have just discovered? You and Madame de Montalais are compatriots. She is of your New York. You must know each other."

"I have been wondering," Monk admitted, bowing to Eve, "If it were possible I could be misled by a strong resemblance."

Eve turned to him with a look of surprise. "Yes, monsieur?"

"It is many years ago . . . . I was in the private office of my friend, Edmund Anstruther, of Cottier's, one afternoon—

The effort of the memory knitted Eve's brows; but in the end she shook her head. "I am sorry, monsieur. But I am so glad to meet a friend of my father's monsieur."

"Your father and I entertained one passion in common, one which he was better able than I to gratify, for good diamonds and emeralds. I have often wondered what became of his collection. He had some superb stones."

"I inherited them, monsieur."

The Comtesse de Lorgnes gave a gesture of excitement. "But what a fortunate woman! You truly have those magnificent emeralds, those almost matchless diamonds, of which one has heard—the Anstruther collection?"

"I have them, madame la comtesse," said Eve with a smiling nod —" yes."

"But, one presumes, in Paris, in some impregnable strong-box."

"No, madame, here."

"But not here, Madame de Montalais!" To this Eve gave another nod and smile. "But are you not afraid —?"

"Of what, madame? That they will be stolen? No."

"But what of criminals from outside, from the great cities, from London, and Paris and Berlin?"

"What of the Lone Wolf?" the Comtesse de Lorgnes added. "I have heard that one is once more in France."

Duchemin blinked incredulously at the speaker. "But when did you hear that, madame la comtesse?"

"Quite recently, monsieur.

"I had understood that the monsieur in question had long since retired."

"Only for the duration of the war, monsieur, I am afraid."

"It is true, according to all reports," the Comte de Lorgnes said: "Monsieur Lanyard—that was the name, was it not?"

"Yes." The count screwed his chubby features into a laughable mask of gravity. "Now one remembers quite well. He passed as a collector of objets d'art, especially of fine painting, in Paris, for years before the war—this Monsieur Michael Lanyard. Then he disappeared. It was rumored that he was of good service to the allies as a spy, acting independently; and after the armistice, I have heard, he did well for England in the matter of a Bolshevist conspiracy over there. But not long ago, according to my information, Monsieur Lone Wolf resigned from the British Secret Service and returned to France—doubtless to resume his old practices."

"Perhaps not," Duchemin suggested. "Possibly his reformation was genuine and lasting."

The Comtesse de Lorgnes laughed that laugh of light derision which is almost exclusively the laugh of the Parisienne of a certain class. Remarking this, Duchemin eyed her mildly.

"At all events," Phinuit put in promptly, "I know what I would do if I possessed a little fortune in jewels, and learned that a thief of the ability of this Lone Wolf was at large in France; I would charter an armored train to convey the loot to the strongest safe deposit vault in Paris."

"Thereby advertising to the Lone Wolf the exact location of the jewels, monsieur, so that he might at his leisure make his plans perfect to burglarize the vaults?"

"Is that likely?" Phinuit jeered.

Duchemin gave a slight shrug.

"One has heard that the fellow had real ability," he said.

The servant Jean came in, caught the eye of Madame de Sevenie, and announced:

"The chauffeur of Monsieur Monk wishes me to say he has completed repairs on the automobile, and the rain has ceased."

PALACE THEATER SUNDAY

(Reviewed by Elsie Loeb)

"False Fronts" as its title indicates, is a story of shame and pretense. Written by S. Barrett McCormick, the Cleveland impresario, the feature reveals that a showman, having his hand on the pulse of the public, is able to give that same public what it wants. He has contributed a feature which doesn't pretend to be anything novel in theme. It is just a tale of regular people and will appeal on that account to movie audiences every where. Certainly it will be enjoyed by every member of the family because it details common faults and extolls honesty. The title itself uncovers great exploitation possibilities and it should draw like a magnet regardless of the entertaining qualities of the picture.

The director is to be commended for making a simple, progressive drama. There are no repetitious details, the plot unfolding easily and naturally. Pictorially it offers some telling "shots" emphasizing a number of lovish sets, not a few of which are exceedingly vital. And it carries a fine vein of interest and suspense culminating in a stirring climax. The plot treats of the psychology of sham and pretense as encountered in life of normal youth. This young man is forced to give up a career because of his father's sudden death. He returns home to discover that his only heritage is a fine name and a healthy crop of debts. The remainded of the story shows him finding himself—adventures which take him through distressing incidents before he locates the road to love and happiness. The plot takes him to New York and Butte, Montana, and destiny introduces the romance in the figure of a girl, the daughter of a nouveau riche widow.

"THE NIGHTCAP"

Oftentimes when a good play comes to town, the first expression noted is, "I wonder if they will give us a good cast and production," having been mulcted so often by inferior attractions, and they think twice before going to the box-office and making inquiries relative to the merits of the play, cast and production.

"The Nightcap," which comes to the Auditorium Monday, Sept. 25th is a highly successful melodramatic comedy, full of thrills, romance and mystery. Max Marcin and Guy Bolton, the authors, have given to the American public one of the best plays of the season, and it comes direct from its long Chicago run, where it enjoyed capacity business for eight months at The Playhouse, with the same cast and production.

GRUWELL'S IDEAL THEATRE

For those who enjoyed action on the screen today's program at The Ideal Theatre will just suit. That husky cowboy actor Franklyn Farnum will be shown in his very latest Western Comedy Drama "So This is Arizona." Plenty of stunts and a whale of a story with plenty of laughs scattered through. Then there is the comedy a century "Some Class" and last but not least in any way. Chapter four of that wonderful outdoor chapterplay "The Blue Fox" with Ann Little and her east of daredevil players. If one hasn't started this most interesting and exciting of all the serials one should do it this very evening. And inasmuch as the theatre has been crowded all three Saturday nights since the change in manage- It will be prudent to come either near seven or at nine when the last show

At last the flivver has been immortalized!

The familiar "tin lizzie" has successfully charged its attackers' shafts of ridicule and thrown up a strong defense of honor and glory!

Such is the achievement in the new Paramount picture, "Across the Continent," starring Wallace Reid which shows at The Ideal Theatre on Sunday and Monday. It is beyond doubt the best automobile racing story in which this popular star has been seen. It involves a cross-continent race, wherein Mr. Reid, playing the son of Theodore Roberts, the manufacturer of the poorman's car, drives the little motor, known as the "Dent," through wind, rain, fire and across mountains rivers and deserts; on to victory, defeating all contestants.

Mary Maclaren, leading woman and former star, supplies the romance and shows no little pluck by sitting at the star's side as mechanician as he tears over the roads at a terrific pace. Others in the cast are Betty Francisco Walter Long, Lucien Littlefield, Jack Herbert, Guy Oliver and Sidney D'Albrook.

Goldwyn presents Frank Lloyd's Production

THE MAN FROM LOST RIVER

with House Peters

The story is the first original photoplay written by Katharine Newlin Burt, whose two previous stories, "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," have been made into stirring motion pictures by Goldwyn.

"The Man From Lost River" pictures the trials of a powerful, patient lumber camp foreman in "standing by" the girl he loves while a weak nephew of a millionaire marries her, neglects her and eventually proves his utter unworthiness. An act of providence strips all the characters in the play to their fundamental fineness or baseness, at the same time that wickedness receives its just reward.

House Peters gives an exceptionally fine performance of the strong, lumber camp foreman. Fritzie Brunette is the girl who cannot see where her true love lives, and Allan Forrest is a polished, cultivated weakling.

THE MAN FROM LOST RIVER
with House Peters

The story is the first original photoplay written by Katharine Newlin Burt, whose two previous stories, "The Branding Iron" and "Snowblind," have been made into stirring motion pictures by Goldwyn.
"The Man From Lost River" pictures the trials of a powerful, patient lumber camp foreman in "standing by" the girl he loves while a weak nephew of a milloinaire marries her, neglects her and eventually proves his utter unworthiness. An act of providence strips all the characters in the play to their fundamental fineness or baseness, at the same time that wickedness receives its just reward.
House Peters gives an exceptionally fine performance of the strong, lumber camp foreman. Fritzie Brunette is the girl who cannot see where her true love lives, and Allan Forrest is a polished, cultivated weakling.

POMIAC FULL-POWERED GASOLINE

Prove POMIAC'S Claims in Your Own Car

Judge for yourself how POMIAC straight-run-gasoline compares with cheap, blended, common gas by using each for the same length of time under the same conditions and keeping a record of results.

POMIAC
FULL-POWERED GASOLINE

See that your motor is in the same good shape for both tests—then watch your mileage per gallon. Register your impressions of comparative riding comfort. Note any differences in power and pick-up. After each test is over, examine your spark plugs and piston heads for carbon deposits.

We will gladly let POMIAC sell itself to you on your own comparison with any other gasoline on the market.

If you don't agree that it is better and (mileage and upkeep considered) more economical, tie to the gas that has it beat, but if POMIAC does, (as it most surely will) show cause for using it instead of any other gasoline, don't flirt with other motor fuels.

Food of the best, skillfully prepared into tempting, delicious dishes served amidst the most pleasing surroundings—that's the Congress. Everyone knows of the Congress in Chicago. Everyone knows that to dine there is to dine well, but that no dinner is quite complete without a cup of that delicious excellent coffee.

Thousands of guests have gone to their homes and raved about that coffee—the coffee that made a perfect finish to a perfect dinner.

And it was Thomas J. Webb Coffee, of course.

You may have this same good coffee in your home—just get it from your grocer. You pay no more for it than for ordinary coffee. In fact, it is an economical coffee, for you get more cups to the pound. Try it!

PUHL-WEBB COMPANY

An original "live-flame" roasting process seals all the flavor in the bean. An air-tight metal container maintains the original flavor and freshness of the coffee, so that all the exquisite full flavor goes into your cup.

Thomas J. Webb Coffee may be had ground or in the bean. The ground is especially recommended, because of uniformity in just the right size, and all the chaff is removed.

More Mileage—Less Carbon

Hot-Shot gasoline gives you the most for your money. It fires quickly, gives greater mileage, and enables you to start your engine right off on these cooler mornings even though the carburetor hasn't been re-adjusted for the cooler weather. Comparative freedom from carbon is another advantage of "Hot-Shot" Gasoline over others.

Browns Cop Easy Victory But So Do Yank Athletes

St. Louis—Aided by errors and poor pitching, St. Louis on Friday defeated Philadelphia, 11 to 5, but advanced no closer to the pennant, as New York defeated Cleveland.

George Sisler, who was selected on Thursday as the league's most valuable player was back in the lineup after his enforced vacation because of an injured right shoulder. He got one hit in five trys.

In the second inning Hauser and Miller clouted successive home runs. Hauser's dropping into the right field stands and Millers' into the left field seats. No one was on base.

Hasty was removed after the sixth when the Browns ran up five tallies after the Athletics had tied it up in their half.

Ruth Fans Twice

Cleveland—The Yankee's had no trouble beating two Indian rookie pitchers on Friday, 9 to 3, despite the fact that each of them fanned Ruth once. Ruth, however, made two doubles and drove in two runs. Speaker, batting in the ninth, added another pinch hit to his already long record.

Ragged Playing In Final Inning Costs Pirates Win

New York—The New York Nationals increased their lead to four and a half games on Friday, defeating Pittsburg in the last game of the series, 8 to 7. Manager McGraw used twenty players, six of them pitchers. Giants won the game off Adams in the ninth inning when, with one out, Frisch was hit by a pitched ball and Meusel walked. Both advanced on a wild pitch and Frisch scored on Young's infield hit. Kelly followed with a single to right, scoring Meusel. Pittsburg got off to a good lead when the Pirates scored five runs on J. Barnes and Hill in the fourth inning on five hits, a base on balls and two singles.

Milwaukee Agricultural School Is Well Equipped

Milwaukee, Wis.—Due to the splendid plant and equipment of the Milwaukee County School of Agriculture, Supt. Thomas M. Campion, told new students that he believed the Milwaukee school afforded the best opportunity existing anywhere in the country for training in agriculture.

The school has the management of 1,100 acres of farm land and a herd of 230 cattle, besides hogs, sheep and poultry. He said "No other school gives the same chance to learn the practical end of agriculture."

The increase in enrollment for the year is nearly 100 per cent above that of last year, according to the superintendent. Enrollment for this term is 210.

The Oklahoma State Fair will be opened at Oklahoma City today and continued through the coming week.
